SCENES OF ELECTION NIGHT.

"Hurrah!"

"Hurrah! hurrah!! hurrah!!!" We don't know exactly what for, but "hurrah!" Terrible excitement—everybody throwing up everybody else's hat, and a brick in several of them. "Hurrah for Seymour!" there it comes down the street: "Hurrah for ULLMANN!" Bonfires in Delaware,—three cheers for him. Sound the brazen horns—blow the trumpets—clang the cymbals—beat the drum. "Hurrah for SEYMOUR!" So cries the next crowd that comes sweeping down past the Park, and turn off into Beekman, as if afraid to pass the fountain. Three cheers more!—but this time they are for 64 many different men as there be throats in the assembly. None cry out for CLARK, though. The CLARK men went to bed two hours ago. Strangely enough, they thought the job was over at sun-down, and went home. Hurrah!

We put on our beaver—ah! when GENIN was a prominent candidate that hat cost us four hard dollars, and it ought not to be risked out on election night—but one thing is certain, at least, we shall have no occasion to throw it up, for our candidates are left to slumber on their Christian feather-beds to-night. No yelling populace gathers under their windows; nobody insists on their coming out in the ir night-gown and cap, to catch their death a cold; how we pity other folks' candidates, whose measures the undertakers might as well take at once! It is ridiculous—and we felt, as we looked out from our upper window, upon the thick crowds that swarmed in all the visible streets—we felt to ask, can it be possible that their mothers know they're out?

AROUND OUR OFFICE.

We put on our hat and went out. Around the TIMES office a great crowd was gathered—everybody that could be was inside, and everybody else was trying to get in. Behind the counter clerks were busy pasting upon bulletins, in large letters, the results as the returns came in. Each new bulletin was hailed with delight. How happy everybody seemed. If SEYMOUR was ahead in any district, "Hurrah" shouted the frantic crowd. If ULLMANN was ahead, it seemed as if it was the same crowd that hurrahed. If CLARK was ahead—but he was not—the contingency did not occur. At ten o'clock, the crowd was bewitched with joy. At eleven, the majority were hoarse and hatless. At twelve, most of the window panes were kicked out by the innocent fellows who sat on the upper sills and cheered, and contributed to the general mirth by rolling the glass down upon the heads of those below. At one, if you asked a man what time it was, he answered, "Just SCROGGS!" At two, if you offered to pay a creditor the quarter you borrowed an hour before, he answered, "No you don't, Mr. CLARK." At three, when the policeman asked SMITH if it was his watch that he (policeman) had recovered from a pick pocket, SMITH replied with a "Hurrah, 15,000 ahead in the City at least." So is next,—and so we go every week up daily to TAMMANY Hall.

TAMMANY HALL.

A red-faced man, whose breath was sweet as that of grass-fed kine, and his face blushing as the rosy morn, was comforting the SOFTLIES. "Boys," said he, "let us take comfort and be encouraged and not be discouraged, for there's a great victory for somebody, as yet known by the powers unseen. Will ye have your glasses entered and the last chirp of liquor that ye have taken from you, though it may be molasses or vinegar, and no rum at all in the bottle under yere bed? Then was it a righteous cause we had, and it would have been a good thing for us if SEYMOUR had been elected."

"That's the talk, old feller; give us more of the liquor," shouted one who straightened up for the occasion, and seemed for a moment sober.

But here a return was made. It read: "SEYMOUR, 501; ULLMANN, 223; CLARK, 5; BRONSON, 1."

The publication office of the DAILY TIMES was densely packed till long past midnight with anxious inquirers after the returns. The crowd was so dense for hours together that it was impossible to enter or leave the premises by the ordinary channels. The result of each dispatch was ardently posted as soon as received, and the friends of the different candidates sent up their hurrahs as the votes chanced to please their fancy. One gentleman, tolerably well filled with electioneering spirits, spied Capt. ISAIAH RYNDERS in the crowd towards midnight, and insisted upon a speech from that illustrious orator. The Captain declined the invitation to deliver a set speech; but favored the audience with some remarks improvised for the occasion. He said he was much obliged to these gentlemen for putting up them returns so as everybody could read 'em; and he didn't see why anybody should want to come into anybody else's private office and make a disturbance. So he advised the gentleman to "make less noise," and proceeded to express his sentiments in favor of the policy of giving up cleverly when the deed is done. "Now," said the Captain, "you have stuck up there, something that I like to see; Livingston County only 700 against SEYMOUR. We expected 1,400, and we are glad to find that it is so little." "Every gentleman (he added) will give up when election is over and he's defeated; and if he don't give up then, he must be made to,—that's all." The Captain made an eloquent speech, and the row was quieted by the magic of his voice.

Throughout the streets there was the sound of drums and fifes. Shouts of all parties and triumphs of noes; groans for ULLMANN, answered by tremendous cheers; grunts for SEYMOUR, balanced by outbursts for CLARK; invitations "not to take a drink," offset by hurrahs for "no Know Nothings." The polls were beset in vain by anxious candidates, except where the inspector was a special friend, (a thing more than likely to happen); the offices continued to be besieged; and the excitement suffered no abatement till long into the small hours.

A great crowd assembled at the Tribune corner, and sent up vociferous shouts for the "American Boys." The party shouted till well on towards midnight, and hailed the dispatches, when they read for ULLMANN, with great demonstrations of satisfaction.

Bonfires were abundant. The "young ones" seemed determined to have their enjoyment, whatever might be the result; and grocers felt constrained to place in safe keeping their surplus empty barrels, lest they might not add fuel to the flames of youthful ardor.

A small procession of Softs paraded through the streets of the lower Wards, cheering lustily for "SEYMOUR and Victory," "SCHAFFER and Tammany Hall," while a much larger procession, with a full band, marched around with loud hurrahs for HARRIS.

JAMES W. BENNET, with a few of his friends, were driven in a hackouche to the different offices, and were hailed in a most enthusiastic manner, the vehicle being frequently stopped, that its inmates might receive the congratulations of their friends.

The crowds in the streets began to diminish at about 12½ o'clock, but quite a number remained about the offices, waiting for the morning issue.

Ocean Steamers.

Capt. R. B. FORBES, who has given a great deal of attention for some years past to the general subject of ocean navigation, has published in the Boston Journal a long article discussing the general subject of the causes of the Arctic's loss, and the precautions which ought to be adopted hereafter against similar calamities. We republished, some days since, a letter written by him over two years ago, on the necessity of a more thorough organization and discipline on board our ocean steamers than generally obtains. Upon this point he reiterates what he then said, and makes the following additional suggestions as to the cause of these defects:

I would remark, in addition to what is therein said, that it is of paramount importance, in order to carry out a plan of organization, to have more petty officers, more trusty and well tried seamen. These can only be secured in our Atlantic steamers by giving extraordinary encouragement to great men to remain by the ship. The excuses now are, and I regret to say that in American steamers and packet-ships they are valid to a certain degree, that "We cannot get men in these short voyages that will stay by us. We leave New-York oftentimes with firemen and seamen we have never before seen, and whose names we do not know, and they scarcely know under what names they have shipped. By the time we get fairly to sea, and begin to think of getting matters into ship-shape order, we find ourselves on the other side. In fact, all our time and energy is expended in taking in and making sail, steering the ship, keeping a good look out, cleaning ship, and the usual duties of the sea. We have no time to drill green hands, or seamen who are strangers to us, in matters relating to boats; we do not expect to run anybody down, and we really cannot undertake to neglect the daily routine of ship's duty, for the purpose of drilling strangers for emergencies which may never happen."

Another tells me that "Congress is at fault. The directors of the set me in a great degree attributable to the absence of power to enforce prompt obedience to the ordinary duties of the ship, to say nothing of the extraordinary duties devolving on us in cases of great emergency."

There is much in these excuses; they are not unreasonable; our legislators have deprived the masters of the power to enforce discipline, and of the public expects from the commander in times of emergency the greatest self-possession and coolness. The public demands that the steamship—age, and the sailing packet—shall make the quickest possible run, deliver her living or inanimate freight in the best order, ahead of all competitors; and this must be done by a physical power only brought together for the first time a week since, and wholly dependent on moral suasion for its government. With such elements as we have to deal with, I submit that we are sailing too much. But let me not dwell too long on the existing evils. I must come to the remedies and other matters. It is sufficient to say, in regard to the speed of steamships in thick weather, that the public voice insists on speed, and I am ready to sustain this verdict for several reasons. At a high rate of speed, the time of danger and the chances of collision and of damage by gales of wind are lessened; and last, not least, the danger to the steamship and her crowd of passengers, in case of meeting an obstruction, is not so great as at a slow pace, and besides this, she can be more readily controlled by the helm, and more distinctly heard by sailing ships. These are among the principal reasons for going at full speed in fogs, when the wind is usually moderate.

Much blame was attributed to the Arctic for going at full speed when she ran down the Charter Oak, in 1850—for my part, I think she was perhaps saved by what some on board had the ship struck on where the Arctic was struck, the Europa would most probably have been where the Arctic now is, at the bottom of the sea, and there would have been very few from either ship to tell the tale! Much blame is addressed to Capt. LOCK for doing exactly what the proprietors of all the Atlantic steamers try to do, and boast of when done: namely, to make the shortest passage, to beat all competitors. If it is really criminal to run in fogs across the banks, the proprietors of steamers should be punished first, the law-makers next, and the Government (for insisting that the mails should be carried quickly,) must not be forgotten; the poor captain who stands shivering on the bridge as the 'bell-puller' for many days and many nights, trembling for the safety of his passengers, and endeavoring to please their every whim, should be the last to be punished for going fast, even if it were more dangerous than to go slow.

I say, then, "go ahead" when you know where you are, and sound frequently when you do not. Sometimes fogs prevail for days at a time, and in certain locations, where there is the most danger of coming in collision, even for weeks; suppose the Atlantic steamers and packet-ships should by common consent, or by force of law, determine that five or six knots must be the limit of speed in foggy weather, and that bells must be rung, and whistles blown, and guns fired! What a splendid accumulation of dangers would be present! To my mind the dangers of the sea would be vastly increased. The Captains would not stand it long, and the way they would get over the difficulty would be by making the knots of double length and then go ahead.

But there are certainly some things to be done, and as I am not disposed to find fault without suggesting remedies, I will now undertake to do this.

*A certain number of picked men should be kept in the steamship, at whatever cost, and they should be sufficient in number to steer the ship, to keep the look-
